Among the papers read at the recent meeting of the Kansas Pharmaceutical Association, was one by George Leis of this city, entitled, "Dandelio Root-can it be cultivated in Kansas?" The paper was instructive in a medical point of view, and the dandelion's value commercially to Kansas was an in-ference that could not but be implied. Kansas does not naturally produce the root. Its growth, when found, is the result of the accidental transportation of the seed to the state, We quote from Mr. Leis' address, and call the attention of our farmers to the fact that the dandelion may be grown in any ordinary soil, and judging by the sales made of the preparations and extracts of the plant by the Leis Chemical Manufac-turing Company, the dandelion might very well be given a corner in every nnual crop raised for sale.
